

Professional Training Course on Prevention of Pre-eclampsia

25 Nov 2017 (Sat) Afternoon
Prince of Wales Hospital, Shatin

Introduction

Studies have now confirmed that pre-eclampsia can be predicted accurately in the first trimester, and be effectively prevented by aspirin. Are you ready to offer this evidence based service to your patients? Learn the practical tips with hands-on training

Speaker - Prof. POON Chiu Yee Liona

Associate Professor (Clinical), Dept of O&G, CUHK

Liona Poon was awarded MBBS from University of London in 2002 and undertook her specialty training in Obstetrics and Gynaecology in London. She gained a 3-year training fellowship from the Fetal Medicine Foundation and during this time, established a major screening programme for early detection of preeclampsia, which led to a Doctorate of Medicine (Research) in 2011. She then undertook subspecialty training in maternal fetal medicine at Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust and King's College Hospital NHS Foundation Trust with Mr TG Teoh and Professor KH Nicolaides as supervisors.

Her studies have demonstrated that pre-eclampsia can be accurately predicted in the first trimester, and were published in high impact journals such as American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology and Ultrasound in Obstetrics and Gynecology. Her latest work on effective aspirin prophylaxis against pre-eclampsia has also been published recently in New England Journal of Medicine.
